Seretary of War, in an address last night at the convecation of the summer session of Columbia University, warned against "simster forces of evil" which, he said, are at work in the country, seeking to undermine the American government.

He urged the many teachers to whom he spoke to guard themselves against the propaganda of America's "organized enemies." These foes, he said, often are led and financed by aliens. He described the antagonism between capital and labor as the country's greatest menace, and deplored the "present marked contempt for law and the sanctity of human tife."

The subject of Mr. Wainwright's address was "The National Outlook." Professor John J. Coss, director of the summer aession, presided and made the address of welcome to the students.

Mr. Wainwright attributed much of the spirit of unrest to the hordes of unassimilated aliens now here. "They have not absorbed the spirit of our land," he said. "They remain to a great extent aliens in tongue and thought. They are the fertile soil in which are sown dangerous seeds of anarchism and bolshevism."

Mr. Wainwright, in characterizing first struggle between capital and labor as "the most serious menace to our progress and internal peace," said: "Where there should be mutual configuration and it will do the building for your own pleasure if the progress and internal peace," said: "Where there should be mutual configuration and bolshevism."

Mr. Wainwright, in characterizing first struggle between capital and labor as "the most serious menace to our progress and internal peace," said: "Where there should be mutual configuration and dence there is continual ggittation and feel there are an antipulation and thought.
